A bit difficult is that most artists have found that they draw better in their medium of choice, and that being the case, we feel comfortable that your sketch will be a consistent quality that you can be pleased with. Probably the most common problem with sketches is that they are too big... .CO₂-sensitive in vivo imaging of Ca⁽²⁺⁾-permeable AMPA receptors.

Activation of group I metabotropic glutamate receptors (mGluRs) is well known to promote membrane depolarization and the opening of Ca(2+)-permeable alpha-amino-3-hydroxy-5-methylisoxazole-4-propionic acid (AMPA) receptors (AMPA receptors). As a result, Ca(2+) entry through these channels can lead to the triggering of many signalling cascades.

Nevertheless, it is not known whether Ca(2+)-permeable AMPARs are, themselves, involved in the modulation of mGluR activity. In this study, we explored whether such a modulatory link exists by imaging Ca(2+)-permeable AMPARs in vivo. The Ca(2+)-permeable AMPAR subunit GluR3(Q) was tagged with the pH-sensitive yellow protein fura-2. Co-expression with mGluR1a or mGluR2a led to a significant increase in the number of labelled synapses in the CA3 region of hippocampus, presumably via Ca(2+)-permeable AMPARs. This increase in synaptic density was not observed when synaptically impinging GluR3(Q)-expressing neurons were stimulated, suggesting a non-synaptic mechanism for modulation. Local activation of mGluR1a with the synthetic agonist 2-methyl-6-(phenylethynyl)pyridine (MPEP) and mGluR2a with the endogenous agonist 3,5-dihydroxyphenylglycine (DHPG) both led to significant reductions in the number of labelled synapses. The effects of both mGluR1a and mGluR2a activation were blocked by co-expression with GluR3(Q), indicating that mGluRs regulate the density of Ca(2+)-permeable AMPARs. Thus, Ca(2+)-permeable AMPARs in vivo are modulated by mGlu
