Divorce is an emotionally taxing process, but when both parties agree to amicably separate, the legal journey can be much smoother. This process, known as Mutual Divorce lawyer in Delhi, is a dignified and efficient way to dissolve a marriage without the prolonged legal battles of a contested divorce. In Delhi, where the legal landscape can be complex, having an experienced guide is crucial. Court Marriage Advocate Kaushal specializes in facilitating this process, ensuring a stress-free and respectful resolution for both spouses.

The Mutual Divorce Process in Delhi

Best Divorce lawyer in Delhi, governed by laws such as Section 13B of the Hindu Marriage Act, is a two-step legal procedure. It is designed for couples who have been living separately for at least one year and have mutually agreed to all terms of their separation, including alimony, child custody, and property division.

The First Motion Petition

The process begins with the filing of a First Motion Petition in the appropriate Family Court. This joint petition is drafted by the lawyer and signed by both spouses, stating their mutual consent for the divorce. It includes a detailed Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) that outlines the agreed-upon terms of the separation. The court then records the statements of both parties on oath.

The Six-Month Cooling-Off Period

After the First Motion is filed and statements are recorded, the court mandates a six-month "cooling-off" period. This time is provided to allow the couple a final opportunity for reconciliation. However, in cases where all matters are settled and there is no possibility of reconciliation, an application can be filed to waive this period. If the parties still wish to proceed after this period, they can file the Second Motion.

The Final Decree

In the Second Motion, both parties reappear before the court to re-confirm their desire for a divorce. If the court is satisfied that the consent is genuine and not under coercion, it will grant the final Decree of Divorce, officially ending the marriage.
